NAVY OFFICER/
SPY PHOTOS

RATHER: Samuel *Loring Morrison is a U.S. Naval intelligence analyst and grandson of a Pulitzer Prize-winning Naval historian. Tonight, he is under arrest for espionage, not for selling secrets to a foreign power but, according to the FBI, for selling top-secret photos to a foreign magazine, the authoritative British magazine, Jane's Defense Weekly. The FBI alleged today that Morrison supplied Janes with these classified photos taken by U.S. spy satellites. They are secret snapshots of a Soviet aircraft carrier under construction at a Black Sea shipyard. Publication of the photos, the FBI says, gives the Soviets some idea of how sophisticated U.S. spy-in-the-sky satellites are in capturing details of what's going on down on the ground. In London, Jane's won't say how it got the pictures. The magazine does say that Morrison is a part-time editor and sometime contributor to the magazine.

JENNINGS: And you may have seen these pictures a couple of months ago. They appeared in Janes, the London military publication. They show a Soviet aircraft carrier being built. They were taken by an American intelligence satellite. And the FBI has now arrested a Naval intelligence analyst, Samuel Morrison, who is Janes' part-time American editor. He is charged with selling the classified pictures to the magazine.

EAST GERMAN
SPY ARRESTS

JENNINGS: The FBI today announced arrests in two apparently unrelated cases of espionage. An East German woman was picked up at New York's Kennedy airport last night. She is accused of trying to smuggle classified information out of the country for the Soviet KGB.
